Discover the world of ALYS, the virtual muse!

Digital technology has invaded our daily lives: smartphone apps, powerful and numerous softwares, and even, now, connected objects. But who could forecast that technology would enable us to make a dream as old as the world come true: to create a synthetic being, created by man, but yet, sensitive and able to inspire emotions?

ALYS is the first of her kind in France. In the song Dans mon monde (In My World), created by the talented artist Shindehai (leader of Starrysky, French J-pop metal band and member of the collaborative channel VoxMarkers), she reveals herself, in an energetic and coloured —yet full of melancholy— pv.

Who wouldn't like to surpass oneself, to reach such an attractive, yet out of reach horizon? Why could a virtual singer not do so?

The young blue-braided singer's voice touches us by her frailty, her sweetness, as well as her maturity. She offers an innovative experience to her public: the ability for a robot to dream, and to drag us into her dream. Thus, Alys is inspirational. Thus, Alys is the muse of a new kind, a virtual muse.

This promotional video is the fruit of a collaborative work between young new talents from the Internet (Miky-Rei, who realized the video, is only 17 years old!) and the young studio VoxWave. It represents the start of a new creative area, in which creation is no more limited by means, but only by desire and will!

For now a prototype using the voice of the young singer Poucet, Alys still has a long road to follow : VoxWave will have to go through a fundraising and through a technical partnership based on a new cutting-edge Japanese technology. This technology gathers together text-to-speech and singing voice synthesis, through an intuitive interface. Thus, it would be the first software offering this possibility in French, with a voice quality without any comparison with what we know for the time being.
